

TALK · 40 MIN + Q&A

Security in the workplace

For companies with employees at every skill level. Concrete examples of what can go wrong, including what a BadUSB actually does the moment someone plugs it in.

ABOUT THE TALK

Most breaches don't start with advanced technology. They start with an email that looks perfectly normal, a phone call from "the IT department", or a USB stick someone found in the parking lot. In this talk I show how attackers actually work, with real examples from my day job as an ethical hacker.

The goal isn't to scare anyone. It's to make security understandable and even a bit fun, so people remember it the day something feels slightly off.

What your audience takes away

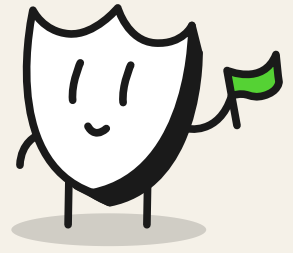

- What phishing and CEO fraud look like in practice, and why they fool even experienced people
- What a BadUSB actually does in the seconds after someone plugs it in
- Simple habits that stop most attacks, without anyone having to become a technician
- How to speak up when something has happened, without shame and without drama

How the talk is structured

The talk runs about 40 minutes and ends with an open Q&A. The content is adjusted to your industry and risk profile, and the demos are picked to hit home with your specific employees. Everything is shown safely and under control. Nothing is attacked for real.

Practical details

Suitable for all employees, from the front line to leadership, with no technical background required. Delivered in Norwegian or English, on site or remote. Get in touch and we'll put together a setup that fits.
